Re: Ex Parte Presentation, WT Docket No. 99-87

Dear Mr. Sugrue:

Pacific Wireless Technologies, Inc. ("Pacific") hereby submits this ex parte letter and urges the Federal Communications Commission ("FCC" or "Commission") to adopt rules and policies in the above-captioned rule making proceeding to permit commercial (i.e., for-profit) use of Business and Industrial Land Transportation ("B/ILT") frequency assignments above 800 MHz.

Statement of Interest. Pacific is a California-based provider of Specialized Mobile Radio ("SMR") services in the 800 MHz frequency band. Pacific operates the third digital iDEN SMR system in the United States; the other two iDEN systems are operated by Nextel Communications and the Southern Company. Pacific, like other iDEN carriers, requires access to additional spectrum in the 851-866 MHz band, and desires to secure that access via private transactions with existing licensees, some of which hold B/ILT authorizations.

The Current Policy Must Be Abandoned. The FCC's rules currently prohibit Pacific from offering for-profit radio services employing B/ILT frequency assignments ("Policy"). 47 C.F.R. §§ 90.179(f), 90.617 (1999). The Policy should be changed for the following reasons:

- The Policy has been Overtaken by the Facts. The record in this proceeding provides compelling legal arguments that support amendment of the Policy. Equally as important, the Commission should be aware that the Policy has, as a matter of fact, not produced the results that the Policy was intended to achieve- that B/ILT channels would be used only for internal operations by business and industrial users. For example, the Policy was generally not enforced from 1987 until 1995 due to the availability of "intercategory sharing."¹ Further, the FCC tolerates the existence of so-called community repeater systems where, through multiple licensing schemes, third-party managers provide for-profit services using B/ILT frequency assignments. Due to these common departures from the Policy, B/ILT spectrum in any one particular geographic area is often not actually used by a B/ILT entity for its internal needs.²

By way of example, Pacific conducted an informal analysis of the FCC's licensing of B/ILT frequency assignment 854.7625 MHz – Channel No. 151 in the FCC's 851-866 MHz Table of Allocations. 47 C.F.R. § 90.613 (1999). Pacific selected frequency assignment 854.7625 MHz simply because it is the first-listed B/ILT channel in the Table. Attached at Exhibit A is a chart depicting how B/ILT frequency assignment 854.7625 MHz is licensed in the United States. That chart reveals, among other things:

- + Frequency assignment 854.7625 MHz is licensed for 795 fixed transmitter sites;
- + 353 (or 44.4%) of those transmitter sites are operated by for-profit radio service providers (i.e., providers licensed with a radio service code of GX or YX);

- + Of the remaining 442 transmitter sites, 204 are operated by community repeater managers (FB4) or private carriers (FB6) – entities that the FCC has recognized offer the functional equivalent of SMR services;

- + Therefore, of the 795 total transmitter sites, only 238 (29.93%) are actually employed in a manner envisioned by the Policy - radio systems maintained by companies to meet their internal communications needs. The remaining 557 (70.7%) transmitter sites are operated by carriers licensed to provide SMR services, or community repeater managers that perform the same (albeit, unregulated) function. The facts reveal, therefore, that at least with respect to frequency assignment 854.7625 MHz, the Policy fails – most of the time – to achieve the FCC's goal of a “clear demarcation” between SMR and non-SMR spectrum allocations. If Pacific's informal analysis is illustrative of the Policy as a whole,³ the Policy is already meaningless, and continued enforcement of the Policy serves no purpose other than to needlessly prevent private transactions between interested sellers and buyers.

- The Policy Was an Inaccurate Predictive Judgment That Has Not Been Revisited. The Policy reflects a regulatory landscape established almost two decades ago. When the Commission made available additional spectrum above 800 MHz for land mobile radio services, it did so by regulatory categories, the size of which were generally based on its experiences at that time: 80 additional channels were allocated for 800 MHz SMR services and 50 channels each were allocated to the Business and Industrial / Land Transportation Pools. These allocations were not based on science or exhaustive market studies -- they were merely the predictive judgments of the agency.⁴ The FCC

² Under the Policy, Nextel, for example, may operate a for-profit station using a B/ILT frequency assignment acquired pursuant to intercategory sharing, but may be unable to utilize the same frequency assignment in a for-profit system 40 miles distant. The public interest dictates abandonment of a policy so arbitrary in its application.

³ Pacific offers its analysis as a discussion point, and does not claim that it is a scientifically valid sampling of the FCC's licensing actions.

⁴ Amendment Of Part 90 Of The Commission's Rules To Release Spectrum In The 806-821/851-866 MHz Bands And To Adopt Rules And Regulations Which Govern Their Use, 90 FCC 2d 1281, ¶ 51 (1982).

should not leave in place allocation decisions that were made 18 years ago, especially in the face of overwhelming evidence that the underlying market conditions have changed.⁵ Due to a relative reduction in service costs, more coverage, and the introduction of feature-rich handsets, the business marketplace today vastly prefers commercial wireless services to internally-developed wireless networks; yet, the FCC's Policy points in the other direction.

- The FCC Has Abandoned Similar Policies. The FCC continues to abandon artificial barriers between spectrum available for commercial operations and spectrum available for internal communications systems. In the so-called "Refarming" proceeding affecting frequency assignments below 512 MHz, the Commission established two categories of entities eligible for licensing.⁶ Thus, in the most commonly-used frequency bands below 512 MHz, both commercial and internal use systems may be authorized. Similarly, in the 220 MHz band, the new allocation scheme generally does not distinguish between internal use and commercial systems.⁷

Based on the foregoing, Pacific urges the Commission to act on the evidence before it, conclude its rule making proceeding, and abandon the Policy.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Fuller
President and Chief Executive Officer
